

International Virtual Event: Global Smart Villages

Introductory words »Smart Villages are the backbone of Smart Cities«

mag. Violeta Bulc, Curator of Ecocivilisation

Smart Villages are the backbone of Smart Cities.

They are the nucleus where culture, identity and authentic expression of a country evolve, are nurtured and preserved, while shaping the character of a country. That is why it is today more important than ever to ensure that sustainable development of a country side is not lacking behind the urban development. The core areas to pay special attention to are: energy, mobility, digitalisation, social services and smart farming. The EU Green Agenda recognises that in the latest sustainable actions for agriculture. The good news is also that the awareness is raising all over the world, as we will see it today in the contributions of our international guests.

About the speaker

Mag. Violeta Bulc was a higher education teacher at DOBA Business School for several years and had a major positive impact on the school's development and recognition. Her impressive curriculum vitae speaks of a woman with extensive experience and various titles. She is Curator of Ecocivilisation, former EU Commissioner for Transport (2014–2019), entrepreneur, innovator, engineer, author of three books, member of numerous international organisations, committees and conferences, and a traveller through space and time. She was named one of the most recognisable innovators and most influential women in Slovenia for several years in a row. She believes in evolution and the exceptions that alter its course. She believes in the power of positive energy and pure thought, which creates conditions for the flourishing of the right content. She believes in the power of collective consciousness and movements that unite us. She believes that technological developments should serve the people for the development of welfare, creation of added value, and the discovery of new limits of possibility.
